

ABSTRACT:

Considering Human Rights Advertising Campaigns (HRACs) as a specific genre in advertising, this dissertation approaches a study to some of the characteristic features of HRACs, in order to deliver whether Human Rights could benefit of interactivity with new media resources through the production of interactive advertising campaigns. Its goal is to set a reflection on how interactive technology may benefit humanitarian causes and enhance dissemination of Human Rights related areas.